OVERVIEW: Austin ISD Repurposing

Austin ISD is committed to finding new uses for our properties that are underutilized or no longer in use to steward taxpayer investments and benefit students and communities. Called “repurposing,” AISD is interested in making a long-term investment that is responsive to affected communities’ needs while maintaining district sites as community assets.

The public’s ideas shared through the public survey and community meetings may help address some of the district’s challenges, including budgetary deficits and decreased enrollment.

An introductory meeting was held in early December 2021 to describe the project, share the timeline, and review the input process to kick off the Repurposing Project. The public survey was open from December through March 2022 to gathering ideas for the potential use of the sites. Further, from January through March of 2022, AISD hosted an additional 11 community input meetings. The questions posed to participants and their responses,

What are the greatest needs in the community that this site could meet?

"The Coy Facility and its surrounding land is large enough to accommodate a large number of affordable units. Austin is in desperate need of affordable housing, particularly east of IH 35, where many residents of color are being priced out of housing."

"Mix of affordable housing for families and on-site childcare. The townhomes would be for teachers and staff of AISD."

"Community Center focused on family support services, with nonprofit partners focusing on parenting and children's needs ranging from maternity health and early childhood development to teen and pre-college programs."

"Retain space for partners (AVANCE, VELA)"

"Save the green space along boggy creek."

Please select any of the options below that would help address these needs.
